Above the clouds, where the wind howls like a lone wolf and the sun glints on brass and glass, the flying city of Tesma drifts through the skies. Carried by titanic engines and impossible faith. Gears the size of cathedrals turn in open air, steam sighs from copper veins in the streets, and airships swarm around it like bees around their hive.

In the span of only a few years, one name has risen through Tesma's elite faster than any dirigible ever could: Dr. Alistair Nyquist. Visionary. Industrialist. Benefactor. Owner of Halotec Industries, a company whose patents, contracts, and innovations have reshaped entire districts almost overnight. Factories hum. Workers are paid on time. No scandals. No missing ledgers. No obvious corruption.

Tonight, Nyquist opens the gates of his cliffside mansion for a private ball and exposition, attended by Tesma's most influential figures: politicians, nobles, investors, and inventors whose smiles are sharpened by ambition. Crystal chandeliers glow with humming arc-lamps, orchestral automatons tune their instruments running on the newest Halotec Mark 3.2 punch cards, and rumors swirl as freely as the champagne.

At the heart of the evening, Nyquist promises the unveiling of his newest invention—a device so significant that invitations alone have become currency.

You arrive not as investigators, but as guests.

Your names are on the list. Your covers are flawless. To all appearances, you are patrons, scholars, or socialites drawn by curiosity and opportunity. In truth, you are agents tasked with answering a single, dangerous question:

How did Nyquist rise so fast… and what is he hiding?

You have no warrant. No authority. No room for mistakes.

Any hint of suspicion could turn polite applause into locked doors, or worse—an "accidental" fall from the city's edge. Tonight is not about arrests or confrontations. It is about whispers overheard behind velvet curtains, glances exchanged across the ballroom, and secrets hidden in plain sight.

The music swells. The gates close behind you.

Welcome to Nyquist Manor.

Characters:

All the characters are sent as investigators by an government agency or an self-conducted organization watching over the city. The players can decide what they prefer. Instead of the premade characters, the players can create their own Level 3 character.

Elizabeth:
- social butterfly and infiltrator
- grew up in middle-class
- only-child
- some good and some bad family relations
- made an enemy of (influence 8)
- traveled a lot, thats how she met Cornelius
- granddaughter of Nana Val

Cornelius:
- Engineer
- grew up as street kid
- good connection with family in general
- distant connection with older brother Marco, who turned criminal
- got a stipend for studying electronics
- Nana Val is like a grandmother to him
- Had the chance to travel outside of Tesma city with a skyship

Nana Val:
- Experienced spy
- grandmother of Elizabeth
- like a grandmother to Cornelius
- grew up in a family that was managing just so, but with extremely loving parents that taught her to help others and look out for each other
- she has two siblings that she has no contact with. Her oldest brother Toben is a rich self-centered prick with unethical methods and her younger sister Cynthia followed in his footsteps
- Addicted to cigarettes
- Volunteers in the soup-kitchen, well known around poor folk for being generous and fair
- Found an old sword-fighting manual, that brought her on the path of martial arts
- Fell ill for a longer period of time
- was fired from her job in a company for standing up for worker rights
- Was betrayed by a friend, Sir Hamington, who now works with her brother
- Her brother Toben is her biggest enemy and tries to undermine her constantly

PI-42:
- was created by Cornelius, fiercly loyal to him
- designed to help with engineering
- started to develop more of a own mind in the last years